This data-set is about the population of US Citizens that received certain government programs across the various states of the United States of America.

The points of interests are: the top 5 and least 5 states that received each of the programs. The total number of recipients of each program over the years of study were considered as well. It was found that states of California, Texas, New York, Florida and Georgia were the most recipient while the District of Columbia, Wyoming, New Hampshire, Rhodes Island and Vermont were the least recipient.

The variations in the number of recipients can be basically attributed to the differences in population size. However, the case of Rhodes Island and New Hampshire could have been caused by other factors not captured by the data.
